This article analyzes the terminology of diplomats as a linguistic object. The specific features of diplomatic vocabulary, its semantic and communicative functions, as well as the similarities and differences of diplomatic terms in English and Uzbek are discussed.

The analysis of diplomatic terminology as a linguistic object helps to understand and teach this lexical unit, and also increases the effectiveness of diplomatic speech. The study of diplomatic terms helps to understand their place in the social and political context.

Linguistic nature of diplomatic terminology :

Structural features of diplomatic vocabulary

Diplomatic vocabulary consists of specific words and phrases that provide formal and clear communication. Diplomatic terms are usually special terms used in international law, political science, economics, and other fields. Each term carries its own semantic load and is used in a specific situation or context. Studying the semantic aspects of diplomatic terms, analyzing their linguistic structure, and determining their meanings is an important task for linguistics.

Communicative functions of terms

The main task of diplomatic vocabulary is to ensure clear and effective communication. Diplomatic terms usually express caution, politeness, and formalism, therefore they are most suitable for official and professional speech. Analyzing the communicative functions of diplomatic vocabulary helps to understand how it is used in linguistics and to increase the effectiveness of communication. For example, we can talk about the differences and similarities between diplomatic terms in English and Uzbek, their role and purpose in communication.

Intercultural communication and diplomatic terminology

The uniqueness of diplomatic terminology is important not only from the point of view of linguistics, but also from the point of view of intercultural communication. The diplomatic language of each nation reflects its own culture and political structures. Diplomatic terms used in English are often associated with international relations, general normative law and diplomatic protocols, while diplomatic terms in Uzbek are adapted to national culture and history, and some terms have a greater expansion of meaning in international relations.

Analysis of diplomatic terminology in English and Uzbek:

Features of diplomatic terminology in English

Diplomatic terms in English are used in many international organizations, agreements, negotiations between states and legal documents. English serves as a universal language for diplomatic relations, therefore, the terms used in this language have developed to ensure their clear and understandable expression. Diplomatic terminology in English is usually based on international law, diplomatic protocols and other legal and social systems.

Features of the terminology of diplomats in the Uzbek language

Diplomatic terminology in the Uzbek language, taking into account national culture and history, sometimes differs significantly from that in English. The terms used in the Uzbek diplomatic language are more related to national thinking and traditions, but at the same time there are also special terms adapted to international relations. The precise and correct use of diplomatic terms in the Uzbek language helps to ensure that diplomatic communications are effective and understandable.

Differences and similarities in diplomatic terminology in English and Uzbek

Analysis of the similarities and differences between diplomatic terms in English and Uzbek helps to better understand their importance in international relations. While English is used as a universal language, Uzbek has its own cultural and historical context. Nevertheless, the terms used in international relations and diplomatic communication in both languages have similarities, and their study simplifies communication processes.

Conclusion. Analysis of diplomatic terminology as a linguistic object plays an important role in the study of diplomatic language. Diplomatic terms are specially created to ensure clear, concise and effective communication, and they play an important role in international relations, political and economic relations. Studying the differences and similarities between diplomatic terms in English and Uzbek provides the knowledge necessary for the effective use of language in international communication. Diplomatic terminology, with its linguistic, cultural, and social contexts, occupies a special place in linguistics, and research in this area serves to improve the effectiveness of language and communication.
